

Draw a picture in each box to show others what you have learned about charities today:

A charity is a group of people who help others. People give money to charities, which they can then spend on the people that need their help.	Charities help people, animals and even places. Some charities help homeless people, some help cats who are in danger and some help protect rainforests.	Anna and her family help out at a charity called MACS. This charity helps people, like Anna, who have eyes that have not grown like most people's and who have visible differences.
